In a certain New England town the French Church of the Most Precious Blood, facing on Carrington avenue, ran back to Hamlet avenue. On Hamlet avenue, alongside the sanctuary of the church, was the residence of Rev. Mr. Morrill, the rector of St. James' Episcopal church.

His housekeeper, Mrs. G.—, occupied as her sieeping apartments the upper rooms at the rear of the house. From her window and through the stained glass windows of the church she could see the sanctuary lamp constantly burning before the altar. At first she was alarmed, thinking that it was a fire in the church, but when she made inquiries from Mr. Morrill the next morning he told her that it was customary to keep the sanctuary lamp burning in Catholic churches, and from it, and explained to her the doctrine

Freedom to Step Down and Out.

Freedom to Step Down and Out.

We are of the opinion that many ministers would have to vacate their pulpits if it were insisted that their profession and belief and practice should harmonize with what is called the church's creed, says the Catholic Universe. The Watchman (Baptist), of Boston, chimes in and says:

"If a man finds himself not in agreement on important matters with those whom he is supposed to represent, the only honorable course for him is to abandon his representative position. As a private person be can say what he likes, and he throws the responsibility of his opinions on no one. No honest man will consent to be muzzled by the emoluments or honors of an office which compels outward assent to decrimes he does not believe, nor will he use the influence of office to promigate opinions contrary to those he was supposed to hold when inducted into office. The bishops of Derry and Ossory in Erigiand have stated the matter clearly in a reply to some who protested against the dropping of a clergymen because they did not believe in the virgin birth of Jesus. They say it is not a matter of liberty, but of honesty. It is a transparent fallacy to confound liberty of thought with indifference to contract."
